These tremedous sums accreed to Barnato and his inimediate riseds. The smaller investors who had bought the "Kaffirs" at the high premiums soon found that they had overstepped their limits. A great saimp followed. The crash of the Barnato boom was threatened. The "Kaffir King" avoided this by one of the audacions moves he was ever known to have made. He spent $15,000,000 in one day in bracing the South African shares, with the result that the total market value of the shares of the Barnato Bank reached $45,319,000 after the slump. These shares had a nominal value of only $12, 500,000.

While these operations were under way Barnato also floated $6,250,000 of Bar-nato consols, which attained a market value of $35,155,000. He made the Karrir market dominate the whole financial

'KAFFIR KING" BARNATO

Marvelous Career of the Multi-Millionaire Suicide.

HIS RAPID STRIDES TO RICHES

Born in the East End Slums of Lon don, He Amassed Wealth that Rivaled Fiction-Originated Booms that Drove British Speculators Wild-His Faith in the Transvanl.

Farney Barnato, the famous "Diamone King" of South Africa, whose snielde by jumping overboard from the Eritish steam er Scot was reported yesterday, was in many respects a man without a counter part in the world. He was certainly the most remarkable speculator of the century

There seems to be nothing absolutely certain about Parnato's early childhood and boyhood days. He is supposed to have been the son of a poor Hebrew who dwelt in the East End of London, and whose name was Isaacs, and by that name Barnato was called in the earlier stages of his life. The At first be used it as a port of stage name when I wenty-five years ago he began life in South Africa by exhibiting a trick was his first effort as a promoter. The

On the occasion when a play was being presented at brury Lane Theater, with a scene depicting a totel at Koppensburg, he appeared in the crowd as one of the

His private generosity was freque expressed; and in the autumn of 1895 he sent $75,000 to the lord mayor of London for distribution among the poor.

Baranto took a prominent part in the omplications immediately following the the crisis had an important interview with President Krueger in regard to the grievances of the Ultlanders, which was be eved at the time to have mollified the harsh feeling of the Transvani executive toward the raiders. He subsequently sub-scribed $20,900 to the fund which paid the fine. About a month ago it was remored that his health was suffering from the severe tension of speculation, and in the inter part of May it was reported from Cape Town that he was suffering from nervous prostration, and had been placed by his friends under restraint. This was sequently denied by his London representative, who said Barnato was suffering from a slight attack of Cape fever, not likely to prove serious. He was, in fact, a modern Monte Cristo. He had scarcely been in South Africa three years before he was able to begin his speculations. He then purchased a claim in the Kimberley mines. He kep on digging until 1881, when he acquir four claims, which he floated into a com pany for approximately $125,000. That and for some time he continued his career as a player in stage drama. Farnato illustrated in an extraordinary way the finan-cial genius of his race. Up to the point where his fortune began to decline he made money by leaps and bounds, and in of £100,000,000. It was the fashion to but time he was virtually the king of the London money market. In the autumn of 1895, when the beam in woman and child in London with money to invest invested it in Kaffirs. The ware was the last of those financial fevers which periodically attack conserva-tive England, the "South Sea bubble" beng the first. For months it was the controffing passion in London, and it was currely less rampant in Paris and Berlin. The shares went to unbeard of figures and fortunes were made in a day.

The center of this tremendous financial utburst was Barney Barnato, and he was onservatively estimated at that time as worth between $100,000,000 and $150,-800,000. Among his assets was a bank originally capitalized at $13,500,000. In a very few months its capital stock rose in value to $45,000,000.

It was soon after the period of Barnato's first appearance in South Africa that the Kimberley diamond mines began to be at-tractive, and the speculative genius in him impelied him to invest the few pounds of capital he possessed in the sparkling gens of the treasure field.

He was clever and pushing. Everything he touched he made successful. In five years he had carned enough in the retail sale of diamonds to purchase shares in the mines from which his merchandise had come. Before another five years had elapsed his holdings in Kimberiey had become very large, and when the Transvaal gold fields were discovered he had profits to invest in them.

In 1886 Barnato was a definite money power in South Africa, and began to be spoken of as the rival of Cecil Rhodes. Unlike in temperament, and even more unlike in personal ambition, the two men started to be not opponents, but in 1888 they reached the conclusion simultaneously that their respective interests could be best promoted by combining forces, and the De Seers Consolidated Mines were the result, one of the most valuable pieces of property

Although Barnato represented Kimberley twice in the Cape legislature, he had little time to give to politics and little interest in that field of activity. Cecil Rhodes used wealth only as a means to political control. Barnata aspired only to such control of men as nomes from being fabulously rich. His recordin the Cape legislature was quite de-void of incident. When the tremendous inrease in his mining interests called for the ablishment of a London branch, this took the form of the Barnsto Bank.

From that date he spent most of his time n London, living at first in Earl Spancer's town residence, but moving finally into a magnificent mansion overlooking Hyde three children-two sons and a daughter. He always had, or professed to have, boundless faith in the future of the Transvaal, and his personal popularity among all classes of Afrikanders was very great. Many interesting stories are told of this. His only reception time, however, was the bour of breakfast, which he always took with his wife and a thoroughbred bull pup. He affected a rather loud style of costome and invariably wore white silk

The report of Mr. Barnato's suicide was made at Funchal by the captain of the steamer Scot. His report was that Bar-nato, who had not shown the least sign of agitation, but who had kept rather more closely to his cabin than was his habit on board ship, soddenly appeared on deck, while most of the passengers were in the saloon, and, with a cre that and a passenger says was only an un His body was recovered, but though every effort was made to restore animarichest man in the world had left all his cares and worries behind him forever of this marvelous man, it is related that, soon after his arrival in London, South African stocks took such a jump that European capitalists poured $75,000,000 into what was then termed a "blind pool." They did this, it was added, on the word of a "lucky speculator," a man who, a few months before, had had no standing in the financial world of Europe. The London Stock Exchange, and the tourses of Paris and Berlin became tremendously interested in the fluctuations of the "Kaffir" stocks. The shares of the Barnato Bank were floated at an enermous premium. The stakes involved in the transactions were considered to be larger, the winnings richer and the losses heavier than in any other financial specu lations the world had ever known. Shares in the Barnato Bank that were issued at $5 were sold on the day of issue for $23. The public was able to get none of these shares at the issue price, and the socks, which he always humorously begged profits from the transactions were re-the cartoonists not to attempt to repro-
